concept

- A physical/virtual shopping environment in which one can shop for consumables and didactically learn about the costs of these choices via visual representations of climate change as sculpture and print.

- To critique our consumption of goods in new forms and quantify its hidden costs in a visual and tangible manner (co2 levels, loss of jobs to mechanization, etc)

setup

Station 1:

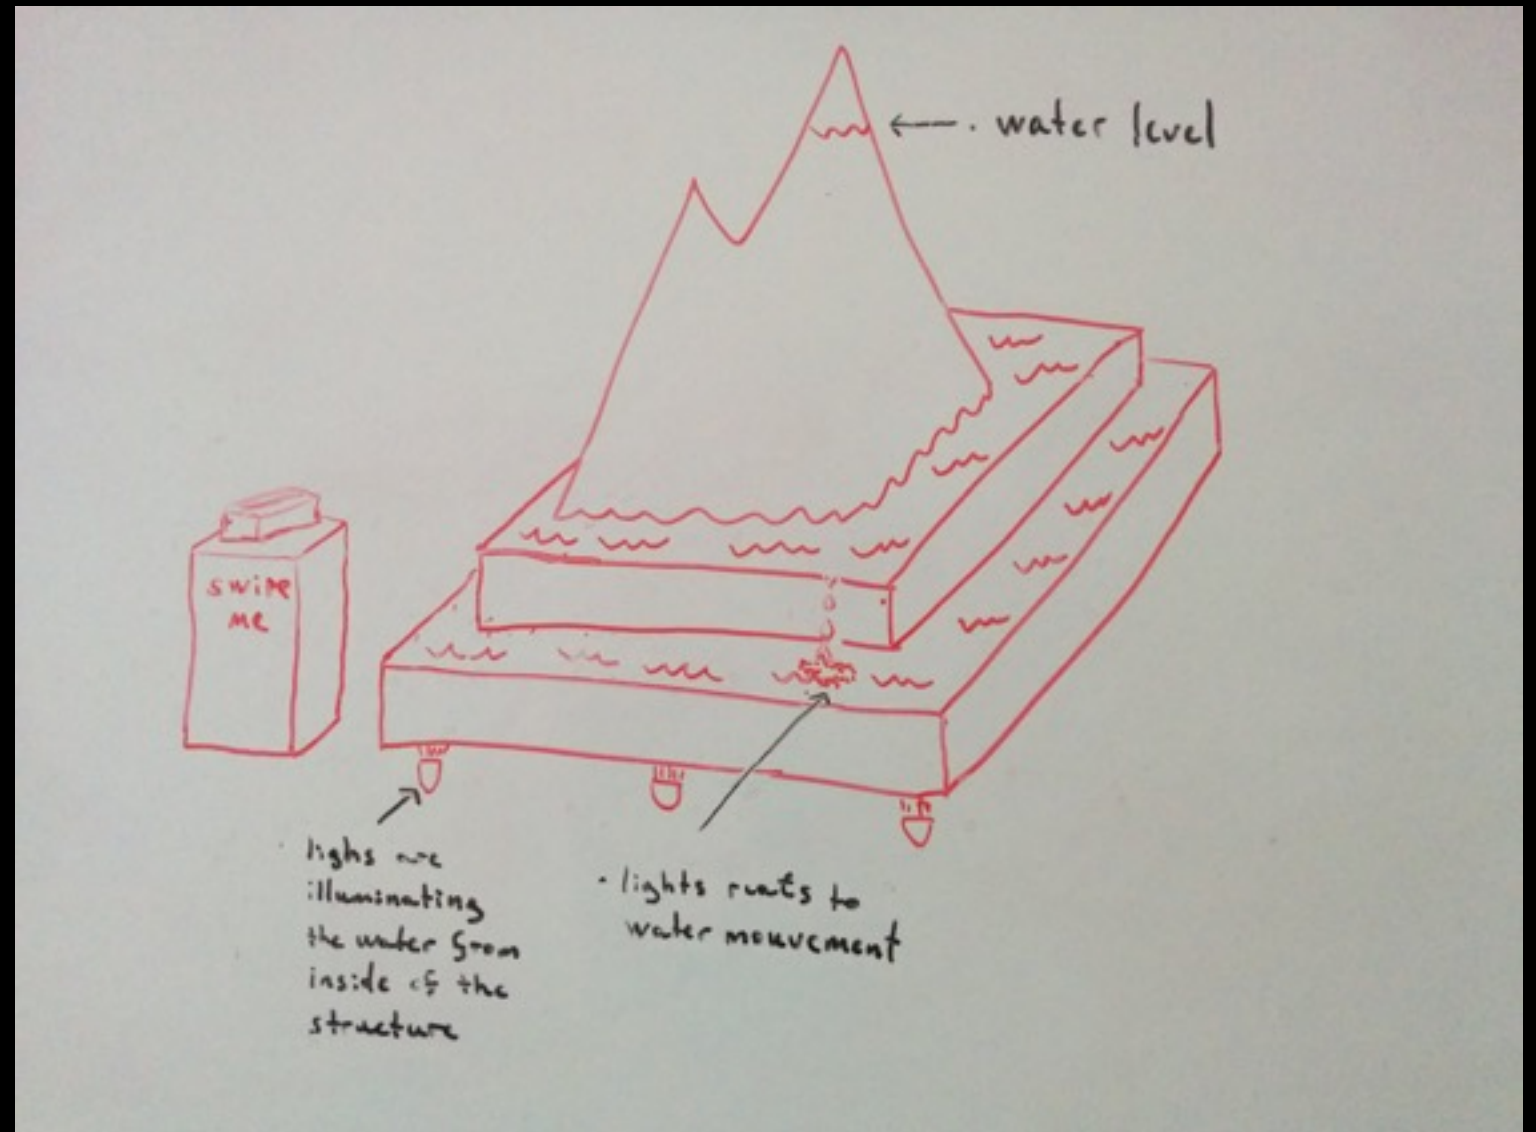

- A touchscreen interface to “shop for items with” that loads your order on a screen

Station 2:

- An iceberg sculpture where the water level responds as the information from the card is read + a receipt of your consumption is fed out

technical requirements

- HTML/CSS/Js for designing the interface and defining the user experience
- javascript/node.js programming for the back end of the touch screen interface
- c++ programming for programming the reading/writing of the shopping cards
- 3d modeling/CAD renderings and building for the iceberg design
- arduino/C programming for the receipt printer
